Point of Care Ultrasonography (POCUS) is a tool that has changed the way we manage our critical patients. It improves patient outcomes and physician confidence in their decision making. Although the skill of Ultrasonography is important, it is also important to properly apply those skills in a clinical context to better manage your patients in an Emergency Department.

We are happy to invite you to attend such a course which not only focuses on the skill, but through a case-based format, makes you think about when and how to apply the skill, enabling it to guide your decision making. With strong basics, POCUS can practically be used in most situations in the ED, provided we practice regularly and continue learning from patients. We look forward to seeing you at the workshop.
